UK Outlook for Monday 7 Jun 2021 to Wednesday 16 Jun 2021:
Rather mixed conditions are expected at the start of the period, with a good deal of fine and dry weather around, although outbreaks of rain and isolated showers are still possible, most likely affecting northern and western areas. Otherwise, temperatures will trend towards the warmer side of average. Into the latter half of the period, more settled and dry conditions are likely overall, though perhaps accompanied by the risk of some showers developing each day and longer spells of rain occurring at times. There is an increasing chance of more unsettled conditions with wind and rain for northwestern areas by the end of the period and cloudier conditions in the far west at times. Temperatures are likely to remain average to warmer than average.
